

Transcendentalism - Part 3
CONSCIOUSNESS AS THE UNIVERSAL SUBSTRATE
2025

The modern world sits atop a crumbling metaphysical scaffolding. Empirical science has revealed countless wonders yet cannot explain the inner reality of subjective experience. Religion offers meaning but demands belief in dogma divorced from demonstration. Meanwhile, the reality of transcendental phenomena, near-death experience, astral travel, and persistent consciousness postmortem have been relegated to either fraud or fantasy despite consistent, cross-cultural documentation.

This document proposes a new framework - neither religious nor merely speculative - that accounts for the totality of these experiences by grounding them in a theory of nonlocal individuated consciousness. Consciousness is not an emergent property of the brain; rather, the brain is a localized interface for accessing a fundamentally conscious reality.

DEFINITIONS

- Khabs: The star or spark of divine consciousness. Pure, unconditioned awareness.
- Khu: The luminous body, or vehicle through which the khabs is experienced. May correspond to the subtle/astral body in esoteric traditions.
- Silver Cord: A symbolic representation of the continuity between the physical vessel and the individuated field of consciousness. While being visible in the Astral World, it is not a literal object even there. It encodes the metaphysical tethering required for memory and reintegration.
- Reabsorption: The voluntary return of individuated consciousness into the undifferentiated Source. An act akin to metaphysical suicide. Distinct from death.
- Will: The directive force by which consciousness navigates choice, identity, and evolution.
- Samsara: The wheel of recirculating embodiment for consciousness that has not chosen reabsorption or full integration.

AXIOMS

1. Consciousness is Primary

Mind is not the product of matter. Matter is a constriction of consciousness⁷². Just as the khabs is in the khu - not the other way around - so too do minds emerge from consciousness, not vice versa.

2. Individuation is a Mode, Not a Substance

Consciousness remains unified but may appear divided. Just as water may take the form of ice, vapor, or be poured into separate glasses, it never ceases to be water. Individuality is a configuration, not a discrete object. ⁷³

3. Death Does Not Equal Reabsorption

The end of biological function is not the end of individuated awareness. Postmortem consciousness continues in a balloon-like field, shaped by memory, will, and karmic resonance, until it chooses reabsorption or reincarnation.⁷⁴

4. The Silver Cord is Symbolic, Not Physical

During Astral Projection, the cord is often perceived. It does not restrict movement; rather, it encodes continuity. Its severance - by physical death - prevents return, not due to spatial limitations, but metaphysical disentanglement.⁷⁵

It also follows that the cord has no maximum length and is not subject to assault by either physical or Astral means. So don't fret about wandering too far or getting lost.

⁷² Chalmers, D. (1995). Facing Up to the Problem of Consciousness. Journal of Consciousness Studies.

⁷³ Kastrup, B. (2019). The Idea of the World.

⁷⁴ Monroe, R. (1971). Journeys Out of the Body.

⁷⁵ Ecclesiastes 12:6; Monroe Institute training literature.

5. Communication with the Dead is Possible but Constrained

Just as consciousness localizes, it may persist in semi-bound forms. Communication is only possible through shared emotional resonance, karmic link, or deliberate ritual. The skill to do so is rare, and those with the ability are rarely showmen. ⁷⁶

6. Reabsorption is an Act of Will

Few willingly choose to dissolve identity into the All. Most remain on the wheel of samsara out of inertia, fear, or ignorance. Total unification requires not death, but volitional transcendence. ⁷⁷

7. Memory is Reintegrated Through Interface

Astral experiences may be remembered not because consciousness stores memory locally, but because reintegration allows for imprinting onto the neural substrate. The silver cord serves as the carrier of that re-imprinting. ⁷⁸

8. Psychic Phenomena are Evidence, Not Anomalies

Astral projection, precognition, and telepathy are natural expressions of nonlocal consciousness. They do not violate physics; they expose its incompleteness. ⁷⁹

⁷⁶ Schwartz, G. & Simon, W. (2002). The Afterlife Experiments. Pocket Books.

⁷⁷ Crowley, A. (1904). The Book of the Law.

⁷⁸ Ring, K. (1980). Life at Death: A Scientific Investigation of the Near-Death Experience.

⁷⁹ Targ, R. & Puthoff, H. (1977). Mind-Reach: Scientists Look at Psychic Ability.

CONCLUSION

The evidence for nonlocal consciousness, though scattered - and inconvenient to dominant paradigms - is overwhelming. Rather than dismiss it, we must construct a metaphysics capable of absorbing the implications without descending into fantasy.

This framework - a synthesis of mysticism, research, and systems theory - offers a scaffold. It is not a belief system. It is a map.

And as any traveler knows: the only way to test a map... is to walk it.